ARTICLE X.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

SECTION 1. No county, city, township, or other municipal corporation, shall become a stockholder in, or make any loan or gift to, or lend its [illegible] aid of any person, private corporation or association, nor shall any county, city, township, or other municipality construct or become the owner of any railroad. The provisions of this section shall not prevent such municipalities from aiding enlistments, and in the support of the families of soldiers in time of war; or supporting their poor in such manner as may be provided by law.

COUNTIES.

SEC. 2. Each organized county shall be a body corporate, with such powers and immunities as shall be prescribed by law. All suits and proceedings by or against a county shall be in the name thereof. The power of counties to levy taxes, borrow money, and contract debts, shall be restricted by law.

SEC. 3. The board of supervisors of any county may, by a vote of two-thirds of their whole number, borrow or raise by tax a sum not exceeding in any one year one mill upon the dollar of the assessed valuation thereof, for constructing or repairing public buildings, highways, or bridges: Provided, The indebtedness of a county incurred under this section shall at no time exceed two mills upon a dollar [illegible] or on behalf of any school district within its corporate limits, so that its aggregate debt at any time shall exceed ten per cent on the valuation of its taxable property, as shown by the assessment roll, unless authorized by a majority of the electors residing within such corporation voting thereon as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 16. The judicial, chief executive and legislative officers of cities and villages shall be elected.

SEC. 17. Existing charters of cities and villages may be altered and amended.

[illegible]

ARTICLE XI.

CORPORATIONS OTHER THAN MUNICIPAL.

SECTION 1. Corporations (other than municipal, and those for charitable, educational, penal and reformatory purposes under the control of public authority) shall be hereafter created only by general laws. All general acts of incorporation, and general laws affecting incorporations, may be altered, amended, or repealed. The charter of no existing corporation, not embraced in the above exceptions, shall be renewed or extended, nor shall the power of such corporation be increased or enlarged.

SEC. 2. No banking law, authorizing banks of issue, shall have effect until the same shall, after its passage, be submitted to a vote of the electors of the State, at a general election, and be approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon at such election, but the Legislature may alter or amend the same.

SEC. 3. The stockholders of every corporation or association for banking purposes, issuing bank notes or paper credits [illegible]

ARTICLE XII.

IMPEACHMENTS AND REMOVALS FROM OFFICE.

[illegible]

ARTICLE XIII.

EDUCATION.

SECTION 1. The Superintendent of Public Instruction shall have the general supervision of public instruction, and his duties shall be prescribed by law; and he shall be a member, ex officio, of the boards of all State educational institutions, including the Reform School.

SEC. 2. The Regents of the University and their successors in office shall continue to constitute a body corporate by the name and title of "The Board of Regents of the University of Michigan." [illegible]

[illegible]

SEC. 5. Any vacancy that shall occur in any of the boards mentioned in this article shall be filled by appointment by the Governor.

SEC. 6. The Legislature shall provide a system of primary schools, by which a school shall be maintained in each school district in the State, free of charge for tuition, at least three months in the year. The instruction shall, in all cases, be conducted in the English language.

SEC. 7. A school shall be maintained in each school district at least three months in each year. Any school district neglecting to maintain such school shall be deprived for the ensuing year of its proportion of the income of the primary school fund, and of all funds arising from general taxes for the support of schools.

[illegible]

ARTICLE XIV.

FINANCE AND TAXATION.

[illegible]

SEC. 12. The Legislature shall provide a uniform rule of taxation, except on property or business paying specific taxes. Taxes shall be levied on all property except such as may be exempt by law.

[illegible]

SEC. 15. Every law which imposes, continues or revives a tax, shall distinctly state the tax, and the object to which it is to be applied; and it shall not be sufficient to refer to any other law to fix such tax or object.

[illegible]

ARTICLE XV.

EXEMPTIONS.

SECTION 1. The personal property of every resident of this State, to consist of such property only as shall be designated by law, shall be exempted to the amount of not less than five hundred dollars, from sale on execution or other final process of any court, issued for the collection of any debt contracted after the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 2. Every homestead of not exceeding forty acres of land, and the dwelling house thereon, and the appurtenances, to be selected by the owner thereof, and not included in any town plat, city or village, or instead thereof at the option of the owner, any lot in any city or village or recorded town plat, or such parts of lots as shall be equal thereto, and the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances, owned and occupied by any resident of the State, not exceeding in value fifteen hundred dollars, shall be exempt from forced sale on execution or any other final process from a court, for any debt contracted after the adoption of this Constitution. Such exemption shall not extend to any mortgage thereon lawfully obtained, but any mortgage not given for the purchase money, and any other alienation of such land by the owner thereof, if a married man, shall not be valid without the signature of the wife to the same.

SEC. 3. If the owner of a homestead die, leaving a widow, child, or children, such homestead shall be exempt from the payment of his debts so long as the widow shall be without other homestead of her own, and during the minority of said child or children.

SEC. 4. The real and personal estate of every woman acquired before marriage, and all property, real and personal, to which she may afterwards become entitled, shall be and remain the estate and property of such woman, and shall not be liable for the debts, obligations or engagements of her husband, and may be held, controlled and disposed of by her in the same manner and with like effect as if she were unmarried. And the husband of any married woman shall not be liable for or on account of any debt or obligation of his wife contracted before her marriage, or contracted by her in relation to her sole property after marriage.

ARTICLE XVI.

MILITIA.

SECTION 1. The militia shall be composed of all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, except such as are exempted by the laws of the United States or of this State; but all such citizens of any religious denomination whatever, who from scruples of conscience may be averse to bearing arms, shall be excused therefrom upon such conditions as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide by law for organizing, equipping and disciplining the militia, in such manner as it shall deem expedient, not incompatible with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. Officers of the militia shall be elected or appointed, and be commissioned in such manner as may be provided by law.

[illegible]

ARTICLE XVII.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

SECTION 1. Members of the Legislature, and all officers, executive and judicial, shall, before they enter on the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of this State, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ——, according to the best of my ability."

SEC. 2. Judicial and legislative proceedings shall be conducted, and the laws and public records promulgated and preserved, in the English language.

[illegible]

ARTICLE XVIII.

AMENDMENT AND REVISION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

SECTION 1. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in the Senate or House of Representatives. If the same be agreed to by two-thirds of the members elected to each house, such amendment or amendments shall be entered on their journals respectively, with the yeas and nays taken thereon, and the same shall be submitted to the electors at such time as the Legislature shall prescribe. And if a majority of the electors, qualified to vote for members of the Legislature, voting on the amendment or amendments proposed, shall ratify and approve such amendment or amendments, the same shall become a part of the Constitution, and take effect at the commencement of the year following its adoption.

SCHEDULE.

That no inconvenience may arise from the changes in the Constitution of this State, and in order to carry the same into operation, it is hereby declared:

SECTION 1. The common law, and the statute laws now in force, not repugnant to this Constitution, shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitation, or are altered or repealed by the Legislature.

[illegible]

Approved March 28, 1874.

[illegible]

JOINT RESOLUTION proposing an amendment to section one of article seven of the Constitution, in relation to the qualification of electors.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, That at the election when the amended constitution shall be submitted to the electors of this State for adoption or rejection, there shall be submitted to such electors the following proposition, to be substituted in case of adoption, for so much of section 1, of article VII as precedes the proviso therein, in the present constitution of this State as it now stands, and substituted for section 1, article VII, in said amended constitution, if the latter is adopted, to-wit:

SECTION 1. In all elections, every person of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have resided in this State three months, and in the township or ward in which he or she offers to vote, ten days next preceding an election, belonging to either of the following classes, shall be an elector and entitled to vote:

Number LXXIV.

Tamsui, Formosa, December 1st, 1873.

We began preparations for a trip to the savage country east of Posia, with high expectations of reaching the Pacific in that way, and thus crossing the island in the central and broadest part; but we were doomed to many disappointments from the first. Our only chance for an interpreter and guide was from among the few barterers and traders who had learned the language of the savages in their business with them. Mr. Campbell, on a former visit, had taken as guide one of these, a Sek-whan named Atun, an opium smoker and a great rascal, who had cheated him, and we concluded to get along without him, if possible; but there had been trouble between the Sek-whan and the Che-whan or savages, and the Che-whan had stolen a couple of buffaloes, and no one dared to go in but Atun, who, under the perpetual spur of his love for opium, was generally ready for anything that would pay. But we found that even he was not so anxious this time.

Finally, after a great deal of talk and several days' waiting, we got started, Atun leading the way with a short boar-spear, followed by a Che-whan woman, who had married a Sek-whan, and now went along as peacemaker; then there were two young men carrying our baggage, and Mr. Campbell's Chinese servant; then Mr. Bullock and I, with guns, and Mr. Campbell bringing up the rear, armed with a stout staff, the only weapon his ministerial capacity would allow of his carrying. As we turned the hill that hid from us the valley of Posia, and led up the little narrow valley toward the home of the savages, there was likely a little feeling of doubt among us all as to whether we should ever return; but we were of three races—Scotch, English and American—that do not generally back out when they have undertaken anything.

The path followed up a swift, cold mountain stream, that we were continually fording from side to side. The hills rose up steep on each side to a height of a thousand feet or more, those on the north covered with straggling dwarf pines and oaks, the open ground among them sparsely coated with coarse grass, while on the south side the hills were thickly covered with a tropical vegetation, among which there were tree ferns, and many species of trailing vines that wound about the trees, and hung in coils from them in almost Brazilian profusion. What should make such a great difference in the appearance of the two sides of the valley is hard to imagine, as the soil appears to be the same, the stream cutting across upturned strata of sandstone at first, but most of the way through slate, with veins of crystalized quartz.

After a couple of hours' walk, we saw several savages above us at one of the crossings of the stream, and Atun and the woman went on to parley. They were poor specimens of humanity, small, nearly naked, and with a cringing look that might belong to those accustomed to watching in the brush until some defenseless person falls into their clutches, but such as no man who has the courage to meet his enemy in open warfare carries. They were armed with old fire locks, and looked upon our guns with a great deal of curiosity and fear. About noon the valley widened a little, and we saw a little, rough clearing on the bank above us, where rice had been raised, and finally, after considerable noise, we roused a couple of boys that seemed to be stationed here to keep the few buffaloes belonging to the tribe from wandering farther down. They pointed out the path that here led for a long distance through high, coarse grass, and then down into the bed of the stream again.

We now came into a more settled country, the steep hills on the south side being rudely cleared in several places, with huts in these cultivated spots. We could see the people watching us from a distance; but they seemed suspicious of us, though, when we halted, several came around us. We supplied them liberally with presents, and tried to prevail upon them to lead to the villages farther on; but they seemed very unwilling to do this, and told several stories to prevent us from going on,—one, that they were all drunk in the villages, and that we would not be safe in entering them; another, that they had just captured a Chinaman alive, and were having a great dance and feast over him previous to cutting his head off. Atun came to a stop, and would go no farther that day; so we accepted the reluctant invitation of an old lame fellow to pass the night at his hut, which we could see several hundred feet above us on the hill side. We had a hard scramble to get up, hanging on with our hands to the stumps of trees, roots, etc., to help us up, and this is the soil the aborigines of Formosa are compelled to cultivate. They cut down the smaller trees, burn the larger ones to death, and then pile up the little bits of slate, with which the ground is covered, into small terraces, to keep the soil from washing away, and then plant sweet potatoes, taro—a kind of rice that grows without irrigation,—and millet. The soil seemed to be good, judging from the rank stubble of the rice that had just been cut.

The hut, when we reached it, did not promise much in the way of accommodation, being a hole, some eight feet square, dug in the side of the hill, with stones piled around it, limbs of trees over them, and then a roof of grass. A fire was built, and a broad, shallow cast-iron pan put over with rice and taro for our supper, the Chinese servant telling us that we had better not watch the cooking if we wished to eat, though our hunger had already overcome our finer sensibilities of taste, cleanliness, etc. As we stood around waiting for the mess to be cooked, we found ourselves being covered with a multitude of fleas, from the dogs and old straw around, and we hastily removed to the granery, the only other shelter the place afforded. This was a curious little building, made of grass and bark, and raised up on four posts some four feet from the ground, there being wooden caps over each post to keep squirrels, etc., from climbing up. This gave us cover, but no other protection, and the night promised to be cool; but we hung up a blanket on the windward side, and laying down a Chinese mattrass, were prepared for the night, and waited for supper, which was brought out to us. There was a good peck of rice and taro served in the dish in which it was cooked, and in spite of dearth of table furniture we made a good meal. We were visited in the meantime by several boys and young men, and three or four strapping, tattooed Che-whan women, who examined our clothing and persons a little more minutely than would have been considered proper in civilized society. They were great beggars, and would not leave until we had supplied them with needles, combs, etc., when we rolled up in our blankets and went to sleep.

Morning found our friends, the savages, ready enough to receive new supplies of presents, but as far as ever from offering to lead us farther.

While waiting for breakfast, I strolled into the edge of the timber with my gun, and found the woods filled with strange birds and animals, but almost impossible to get at, as the whole ground was so steep that I was continually climbing up or sliding down. In the edge of the clearing I found fifteen or twenty species of land and tree shells in as many minutes, and then crawled down to the granery to breakfast, which was the same as the supper, with the addition of a chicken, the broth in which it was boiled being brought us in a rattan basket.

Atun finding that his pay would be badly reduced if we went no farther, finally led on up the valley toward the villages, though stopping to talk to every old savage we met, and to ask permission to go on.

As we went up the valley, it grew narrower, and some fine little waterfalls fell over the cliffs at the side. We had been going nearly east since we had left Posia, but we now turned north east up a little branch stream, and following this to near its head, we began to climb steep hills, either in rude cultivation with sweet potatoes, or having been cultivated in years past, the little terraces being covered with alder trees twenty or thirty feet in height. After a couple of hours of this hard climbing, we came out upon the top of the hills, and into a straggling village of perhaps forty dwellings and as many graneries, the latter of the same type as the one that had sheltered us during the previous night. As we entered we could see a few women and children running out at the opposite side, and were finally met by a man who, like our last night's host, seemed to be ailing, but who led us to a house which he put at our disposal.

This house, a model of the rest, was about thirty feet in length and fifteen in width. The ground seemed to have been excavated where it stood, so that we went down to get into it, and it seemed damp as a cave, and as there was no opening but the door, it was so dark we could not see, though it was the middle of the afternoon. It was built by piling up a thick stone wall for a height of three or four feet, and then interweaving limbs of trees between posts secured in the stone wall, and then all covered with a grass roof. We preferred to sit on the projecting wall outside to entering this dark place, and were soon surrounded by a crowd of men, women and children, though nearly all were ailing either from wounds upon the feet and legs, or from other troubles, and there was a great demand for medicine, though we had nothing with us but tincture of iodine, which I proceeded to put on for all sorts of diseases, and nearly every one had some dark brown spots of iodine on his skin before I had done with it.

We now started for a walk, and were passing through the town, when we found that something was wrong, and Atun told us we had better keep quiet for the present. We then saw some human skulls displayed before one of the houses near, and we proceeded to examine these. There were twenty-four in a row upon a little platform, and there had evidently been some ceremony over them lately, as there were bamboo branches and streamers over them. The most of them were white with age; but several near the center had the skin and flesh upon them, which dried down until it gave them a most horrid scowl, one not lessened by the custom of the savages to knock out the teeth for necklaces. Several had large holes cut in them, as if with an axe or a heavy knife. I took out a note book, and was trying to sketch the lot, when Atun again interfered and said, that we were making the people angry by examining their skulls, and we had to back out again, and the skulls were soon removed to a less conspicuous place.

After there seemed to be a little lull in the excitement, Mr. Bullock and I took our guns, and strayed around the edge of the village, shooting a few birds. I got into a dense grove of small bamboos, where the birds went for shelter; but when I returned to the village I found that I had done something terrible, for the people motioned me away with their hands, and I could not come near any one again until old Atun had brought a gourd of water, and sprinkled my face, hands and breast, and thus cleansed me from the evil influence, whatever it was. All that we could find out in regard to the trouble was, that this was a burial place, and not to be entered for fear of spirits. From what we could gather from this and a few other incidents, these savages are living under as great a weight of superstition and taboos as the Sandwich islanders were before they were christianized and as some of the tribes of the Malay Archipelago still possess.

As it was now near dark, we went into the house provided for us, where we found our boys and servants in such a state of fright, that they had done nothing toward getting our supper. The room had a fire upon the ground at each end, the house serving for two families, and at each fire were a couple of low bamboo platforms for sleeping and sitting. Light was given by a pine torch, which one of the women attended to, putting it out every few minutes, and hacking it with a knife to improve it. The furniture of the house consisted of another cast iron pan, and a few gourds for holding water. Opposite the door hung several hooks from the rafters, supporting the family arms and accoutrements. These were a couple of old fire locks, that seemed to be used principally for hunting by this tribe, the arms for war being a couple of long bamboo spears, and a couple of large, curved knives, the scabbards of which were ornamented with long tresses of Chinese hair. There were also a couple of red bags highly ornamented with beads and Chinese hair, as to the use of which we were somewhat doubtful until Atun informed us they were for carrying Chinese heads after their capture. I thought that these things would be a good investment for me, and immediately made proposals for purchase; but, for some reason or other, I could not make out to buy, though I made quite a display of red cloth, beads, etc. The only things we could buy of them were articles of clothing, mostly made of a species of nettle that is very strong, and, when pains is taken, makes fine, beautiful fabrics. This is often ornamented by embroidery of red wool, made from English flannels, or something of that sort, that are bought of the Chinese, and raveled up and respun, and then sewn in. The only article of men's wear is a coarse shirt, made of this hemp, which is perhaps the (ramil) plant that has figured in the agricultural papers so much. The women's dress is not so easily described, it appearing to be made up of strips of this cloth wound around the body.

We also purchased a few curious musical instruments, made by cutting a tongue in a strip of bamboo. This is put between the teeth, and vibrated by jerking a string attached, the sound being very much that of a jews-harp. Several of different calibre are generally strung together, and I heard quite a concert made by several playing in time. This seemed to be one of the especial belongings of the girls and young women of the tribe, and they would bring them and twang away to show their music, and then try to trade for beads, scissors, etc.

These young beauties were tattooed in a curious way, which made them look anything but pretty to us, but likely enhanced their value very much among the young men of the tribe. There were three narrow, parallel lines tattooed—with soot, as I understand—from the ears to the upper lip, three more from the ears to the corners of the mouth, and three more from the ears around the point of the chin. The two intervening spaces between these sets of lines were tattooed with cross lines, so drawn that they made small diamonds with each other. Beside this extensive tattooing that gives the lower part of the face a decidedly black look among the young women, fading to blue with the old, there were horizontal, oblong patches—four or five—upon the forehead, and several more of the same on the forepart of the leg below the knee. The men were content with a perpendicular patch upon the forehead, and another on the chin. Some are said to tattoo a line upon the breast whenever a head is taken, so that a brave is known by the number of his marks; but I saw nothing of this. The women were all decked out with bands of broad shell beads over their heads like white coronets, and pendant ear rings of the same material.

Our supper was another panful of pudding, made by boiling rice and millet together, and quite like corn meal pudding in appearance and taste. Our friends kept about us until late, when we finally got to bed; but found that our bunks were not long enough for Europeans, and we were continually waking up in the night to find either our heels or our heads hanging over, but with something of a feeling of thankfulness that we were still long enough to hang over. We were wakened to a cold, raw morning by the savages again crowding in to see us.

We were now within a short distance of a large number of villages, and had reached the dividing line where the water ran to the Pacific; but we could get no one to lead us farther, and Atun utterly refused to proceed, so we had nothing to do but return. After we had done a little more bartering, and I had exercised my artistic abilities in painting their wounds again with iodine, we set out on the return, the man in whose house we had stopped accompanying us with his firelock as a sort of guard. We made much faster progress down hill than up, and were soon in the valley of the main stream again, where at one of the crossings we met a band of fifteen or twenty of the savages, in full war costume of coarse hemp shirt, their heads, arms, legs and feet being perfectly without protection, and their flat feet almost as hard as horn from long climbing the rocky and thorny hills. Their arms were bamboo lances, eight or ten feet in length, and large knives, while two or three, who seemed to be head men, were decked out with long tresses of Chinese hair, and carried bead bags at their sides. All had small net bags over their shoulders, in which were the rations of rice and millet cakes for the campaign. They seemed to be waiting for us, and fell in behind in single file, and trudged along with us for a mile or so, when another party of six or eight, who were waiting beside the path, also fell into line, and another party still brought the number up to thirty or forty; but whether they meant to serve us as a sort of guard of honor, or had some other design, we could hardly tell. They followed us to the last of their cultivated lands, where we stopped a few minutes to eat, when a young fellow, fancifully decked out in beads with great disks of white shell, two inches in diameter, in his ear, came forward, and told us that Aweatan, the chief of thirty villages, was behind and wished to see us; but as we could find nothing certain of his whereabouts, and there was no time to spare if we should reach Posia that night, we went on, and got in all safe before dark to a great handshaking and penganing from the Sek-whan, who seemed very glad to see us back safe.

This head-hunting propensity of the Che-whan may be at present increased by a feeling of revenge against the Chinese, who have driven them back from the rich lands below into these wild and almst inaccessible mountains; but it is hardly probable that the custom is caused by this spirit of revenge, but rather that it is an old national love for the heads of their enemies, the possession of which gives them rank and importance in their tribe From what we could gather of their language it seems to be Malay in its derivation, and their love for human heads can likely be traced to the same origin as that of the Dyaks of Borneo. That it is not wholly a feeling of revenge, the case of the Sek-whans shows. They pay the Che-whan a yearly tribute of rice and cattle for the sake of peace; but there are yearly from fourteen to twenty people—men, women and children, indiscriminately, missing, and their relatives know that their heads are ornamenting some Che-whan's dwelling.

From what we could learn of this people, any nation would be justified in exterminating them, as the Chinese are to blame for not doing so long ago. Several European crews who have escaped to land from wrecked vessels, are known to have been killed by them, from survivors who have escaped to the Chinese, and the Chinese government is having trouble with Japan at the present time, from the murder of the crew of a Japanese junk wrecked on the east coast, for which the Japanese government hold the Chinese responsible, as they claim to possess the island of Formosa.

At the present rate of progress the Chinese will be several hundred years more in getting entire possession of the island, as they make no decided advance, only a system of slow encroaching from one hill to another, as they can cut the timber down, and thus drive the savages from their shelter. There are probably tribes in Formosa yet who never heard of the Chinese, and have not been influenced by them, unless indirectly; perhaps, by other tribes being crowded back upon them. The general name for all of them, though there are many tribes and nations, is Che-whan, given of the Chinese, and signifying unripe or uncivilized barbarians, as Sek-whan means ripe or civilized barbarians.
