negotiation is to get the indemnity and to give up the conquered territory, but the desire of the indemnity shall not be manifested from the beginning; this is a means of procuring an advantage to your side in the negotiation.

Article III.

When in the course of the negotiation, the matter of the indemnity shall be discussed, you shall refrain from proposing its amount as may be possible, although we shall make no demand beyond the expenses incurred. You shall telegraph to our government the amount offered by the Chinese officials for its decision.

Article IV.

When you shall obtain the chief point of the negotiation from the Chinese officials as desired, you shall speedily settle the basis for the convention. And after its settlement, you shall communicate it to our government by letter or messenger and the final decision shall be made, in conformity with the telegraphic answer of the government.

Article V.

When after the signing of the convention, you shall inform this to the government, they shall take the measures to recall the troops from Formosa by sending an order to the general Saigo consequently

by

by, you are required to announce by telegrams the day, when the convention shall be signed. But as the term of recalling the troops could not be predetermined, you are directed to ask it to the government.

Article VI

You shall consider the receipt of an official dispatch from Pan Wei, as the commencement of the negotiation. You shall first demand to get an interview and then negotiate by letters and act so as to suit the changing circumstances. You are also required to send the above said despatch to the government by the next opportunity

Article VII

It shall be useless to send a high officer specially to negotiate with Chin and Pan and you are directed to commence the negotiation from the time of the receipt of the official despatch mentioned in the preceding article, pursuing in this the steps of the negotiation hitherto carried on. The place of the negotiation shall be fixed, according to the convenience of the both parties.

Article VIII

By the former orders, you were required to return for a time to Tokei for laying to the government the report of the measures proper to be taken in regard to Formosa, after you should have obtained the audience of the Chinese Emperor. But at the present circumstances, the audience could not be demanded of course, before the settlement of the Formosan Affairs, more especially as the latter requires very prompt decision.

Consequently, as it might be unnecessary for you to return for a time to Yokei, you are allowed to deviate from the former orders in this point.

Article IX.

The government have charged the General Legendre to go to Fookien for the persuation of the Viceroy and the other Chinese officials and for the successful settlement of the present affairs, but as there might happen some mistakes between you and him, if there shall be the want of mutual communications, you shall keep with him the regular communications by telegrams, informing him of your circumstances, just as he was directed by the government to do so on his part.

Article X.

You are directed to take the present opportunity to dry up the source of the Chinese claims upon Liou Kiou and to open the doors of the innovation of Corea. This is the ulterior aim of the government and their counselors.

Article XI.

If there might be the final rupture between the two governments government, after your earnest endeavours to preserve the peaceful relation, negotiating always in conformity with the orders received, you have no responsibility upon them and take the proper measures. In this, your are relieved from the anxiety.

Given on the fifteenth day, seventh month, seventh year of Meiji.

It is not only experienced by our people to whom the injuries repeatedly have been inflicted, but also proved by all the world, that the aboriginals of Formosa are wrong and unhuman, and can not escape the punishment of heaven and men.

Why the Chinese looked on such wrongs of their neighbores without inquiring hitherto long? Letting them in their doing wrongs by being afraid of their strong obstinate? while they have pretence to an old phrase "not altering custom and manner." Therefore our Emperor sent a general to that part of Formosa, where the acts of crime were made, to punish the aborigi-

So, the expedition has been undertaken without regarding to its expenses, having it to the view, that it is government's duty to make the revenge upon the wrong and to abate such an evil for long to all the navigators on the Oriental Ocean, and to give beneficience to all the nations.

Now, that a good measures have been taken about it, all the tribes have been brought to our friendly relations.

There is no doubt that Chinese government can not claim that part of Formosa, over which it has not exercised its jurisdiction

Then, to which of the two countries (Japan and China), the right to obtain possession of that land and to instruct that men, shall belong? Our Japanese government have this right, thus it shall be the necessary duties of our government to appoint officers there and to place forces there and to establish rules and laws, where there is no intention to be greedy of the land and people, but it is intention of our Japanese government to establish a system, which shall restrict the savages so that they shall not again do violating acts.

Therefore, if Chinese government be afraid of our possessing that part of Formosa, of which it does use to secure its frontier, Japanese government shall give all the land to it without reluctance, but provided that Chinese government would accomplish hereafter the following matter, as mentioned in writings by San-Wei; to erect military posts, to send cruise vessels, to erect look out towers and light houses and others, which can serve sufficiently to guard against unexpected matters and to facilitate navigations instead of our Japanese government: and more over provided; that Chinese government would repay proper amounts for money and lives of our countrymen, expensed and losed during the expedition, which has been caused indispensably by neglecting its duties of leading the neighbourings to improvement.
