My telegram No. 1623: Formosa.

FJ10310/

I am disquieted at the apparent lack of realisation in Mr. Dulles' message to Mr. Acheson contained in your telegram No. 1333 of the change that has come over the Japanese since the signature of the Treaty in September. The preamble to that Treaty, states that the signatories to it are prepared to treat Japan as a sovereign equal. All the discussions about the Treaty and the security pact which have taken place in the Diet and elsewhere in recent weeks have shown that the acid test to the Japanese is whether the preamble is a reality or not. There is a good deal of suspicion that it is not, and unfortunately some Americans have lent encouragement to this view. Mr. Dodge has told one of my staff that the Japanese are telling him that he can no longer dictate to them as he did in the past. My Canadian colleague has told another member of my staff that the current fishery negotiations are rendered much more difficult by the American attitude of being still in the position to dictate, and by their lack of tact and diplomacy.

2. There is thus a very real danger that the Americans will, unless they are more careful, defeat their own object in concluding a Peace Treaty with Japan. After all that was said at San Francisco by Mr. Acheson and Mr. Dulles, the Japanese can hardly be blamed if they expect what was promised them. Handled properly, there is no reason to suppose that they will kick over the traces, at any rate for some time to come, in their international relationships, and I think both we, and the Americans, can exercise a beneficial influence if we play our cards properly. But the Japanese regard the period of vassalage to the United States as over, and though this is not wholly true, it would be exceedingly tactless of the United States, in view of their publicly declared policy, to draw public attention to the fact that they still intend to make Japan toe the line. If the United States Senate fails to ratify the Treaty, the only gainers will be the Russians, and the Japanese are probably astute enough to be aware of this.

3. It is therefore a very good thing that Mr. Dulles and the two senators are coming out to Japan, and I hope that the statesmanship of the first-named will prevail. But it will not do so if he comes out here with the fixed intention of putting pressure upon the Japanese to conclude a treaty with Chiang Kai-Shek. According to my Norwegian colleague, the rumour that he is going to do this has already appeared in the press, though I have so far been unable to trace it. Be that as it may, I am reliably informed that Mr. Yoshida is sending Mr. Kimura to Formosa some days earlier than was originally intended, in order to establish the agency before Mr. Dulles arrives.

4. I fully realise the difficulty in which Mr. Dulles and the senators find themselves, and if they are prepared to discuss matters on a reasonable basis and not merely to dictate to us and to the Japanese, I believe that it should not be impossible to arrive at a compromise which will meet their legitimate requirements without infringing the spirit of the Treaty, or the agreement reached with Mr. Dulles last June.

Foreign Office please pass to Washington as my Saving telegram No. 385.
