Addressed to Foreign Office telegram No. 1755 of 12th December
Repeated for information to Washington.

Your telegram No. 1424.

I had an hour and a half today with Dulles at his request. He held the floor for the first twenty minutes and went over the ground with which you are familiar. At one stage he said he thought the Americans could if they wished, persuade the Japanese to do what they wanted because they held more cards than we did, but he added that of course they did not want to do this and would much rather develop a common policy if this could happen.

2. I did not take up this point but spent some time outlining the position as reported in my despatch No. 373. I may have made some impression. At any rate I think Dulles now sees the pitfalls, and he told me that he wished the two Senators had not been so outspoken in their remarks at the Press Conference which he and they gave today (where his own statements were unexceptionable.)

3. Dulles is going to see Iguchi and probably Yoshida tomorrow to sound them out, and we shall meet again afterwards.

Foreign Office please pass to Washington as my telegram No. 105.
