Addressed to Foreign Office telegram No.1771 of 14th December, 1951.

Repeated for information to Washington.

Following is translation of article which appeared in the evening edition of the Tokyo Asahi on 13th December:

[Begins]

"According to a statement by an authoritative source in the Japanese Ministry for Foreign Affairs, Prime Minister, Yoshida, will probably tell Mr. Dulles at his second meeting that the Japanese Government intend to conclude a friendship agreement, if at all possible, with the Nationalist Government in order to establish a de facto peace with that Government. This does not imply that the Japanese Government, by ignoring the Chinese Communists, recognises the Nationalist Government as having sovereignty over the whole of China or that they wish to conclude a full separate peace with that Government. The Japanese Government want merely to establish friendly relations in treaty form with the Nationalist Government on a temporary and restricted basis. The reason why Mr. Yoshida will express this intention is, that he wants to make it clear on this occasion of the visit to Japan of Ambassador Dulles and Senators Sparkman and Smith, who are most interested in the China question, that the Japanese Government thinking on this score is not contrary to the strongly expressed desire of the United States Government for the recognition of the Nationalists. At the present, however, the Japanese Government have no other concrete plans than to send Mr. Ken Inukai to Taipeh to sound out the Nationalist Government's intentions with a view to reaching a friendship agreement with that Government".
