Japan's Relations with China.

Following for C.P. Scott from Tomlinson.

Dulles memorandum was in no sense a formal communication to this Embassy and in our view does not call for a reply. There was no suggestion that it was specially written for communication to us. We were in fact given to understand that Dulles prepared it primarily for his own and Acheson's convenience; and that he then decided that it might be useful for the Secretary of State to see this chronological summary of the various negotiations (written from the American point of view) before his talk with Mr. Acheson.
