My telegram No. 47.

Course of the Japanese/Nationalist China Treaty negotiations leading to agreement between the delegations on 16th April and in particular the rejection of that agreement by the Japanese Government on 17th April have been [grp. undec.] accurately reported in the press. The published summary of the text of the Treaty consisting of the preamble 14 articles and 2 protocols with 2 exchanges of notes and one recording of the agreed minutes is also believed reasonably correct.

2. The principal features of this agreement were that reparations and Most Favoured Nation questions were dealt with in the two protocols and that the two exchanges of notes covered the scope of application and Civil Aviation. The agreed minutes dealt with Nationalist claims to "puppet régimes'" (Manchoukuo, Mongolia and Wang Ching Wei's) property in Japan.

3. Japanese rejection [? grp. omitted] believed to be based on puppet régime property and scope of application issues.

4. The Chinese are becoming despondent as the Japanese raise fresh difficulties (sometimes trivial and sometimes fundamental) as soon as the old ones are solved. They are also profoundly disturbed at the second rejection by the Japanese Government of the terms agreed by their plenipotentiary Kawada.

5. The Chinese have conceded more than expected on several issues and their attitude is now hardening. Since a treaty is
