Dear Mr. Eden:

I was glad to have had the opportunity to talk with you last evening on the matter of Japan's relations with the Chinese Nationalists which was the subject of the personal message I received from you yesterday.

I explained to you my concern in the matter and I am sure you understand there is no thought of attempting to coerce the Japanese Government or of its concluding an agreement before it regains its sovereignty. There are, however, in the meantime, the very practical problems of trade, claims, representation and like questions with which Japan must deal. I believe that the Japanese, if they so choose, should not be discouraged from extending the discussion of these problems with the authorities on Formosa into preliminary talks looking toward an agreement which would conform to the realities, but which would in no event be concluded before the Multilateral Treaty comes into force.

I believe you and I were right in our decision to leave these inter-related problems for discussion in Tokyo next month between Mr. Dulles and Sir Esler Dening. I have great confidence that they will be able on the scene to work this out in such fashion as to maintain our common front and avoid giving the Japanese any opportunity to play one of us off against the other. If any difficulties should arise you and I can communicate with each other.

Sincerely yours,

Dean Acheson

Dean Acheson

Anthony Eden,
